Report from Havana—Yellow fever on Spanish steamship Leon XIII from Vera Cruz—Yellow fever at Pinar del Rio and Quemados.

HAVANA, CUBA, September 3, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report for the week ended September 1, 1900:

As will be seen from the inclosed mortality list there have been 23 deaths from yellow fever during the week, more than doubling the number of deaths from the disease, which occurred last week. While the infection is well scattered over the entire city the larger number of cases have occurred on the Prado and in sections of the city occupied by the wealthier class of citizens.

During the month construction work on the Havana electric car line has been under way, and extensive excavation and street grading has been performed. Whether the work necessitating the tearing up of the streets along the street car line at this time of the year is altogether responsible for the increased amount of sickness is hard to determine. It is certain that neither yellow fever nor malaria is confined to the section of the city in which this work is being done, and yet there has been considerable sickness among the laborers, most of whom are Spanish and American, who are engaged in this work.

The Spanish steamer Leon XIII arrived on the 25th from Vera Cruz. I boarded the vessel with Assistant Surgeons Berry and Giralte and was met at the gangway by the ship's doctor, who informed me that he had
